

Will Ely focuses on litigation involving patents, copyrights, trademarks, and trade secrets. He leverages his past experience as a trial-focused paralegal and his technical background in computer science, energy regulation, and environmental law to find successful results.

Will has assisted clients with patent drafting, transactions, and litigation involving medical devices, pharmaceuticals, and telecommunications technologies. Will is a resourceful researcher and gained valuable insight into the judicial mindset as a judicial law clerk at the Minnesota Court of Appeals.

Before attending law school, Will was a highly regarded paralegal at a New York City law firm, where he confirmed his desire to pursue a law degree. His active litigation experience included extensive work involving motion practice at every stage of litigation, including brief drafting, exhibit management, and significant trial experience. He regularly summarized briefs and court decisions for partners, worked several trials, including a nine-week jury trial, and supervised paralegal teams working on complex matters, including an insurance dispute involving events and documents from the 1890s through the early 2000s. During his time as a paralegal, Will often worked with the patent team and gained valuable experience with Hatch-Waxman litigation.

He is an author for the firm's award-winning "Inventor Spotlight," which highlights inventors who have impacted our society with their innovations. Will also writes regularly on the firm's ANDA blog about technology and cases relevant to ANDA litigation.

When not working, Will enjoys climbing at his local bouldering gym, enthusiastically (if not skillfully) playing chess, and reading science fiction. He also enjoys Formula 1 racing and is a lifelong Buffalo Bills fan.
